(January 17, 2024) - Today, esteemed Quebec-based singer-songwriter and performing artist, Ken Presse (pronounced Press-ay), shares his highly anticipated sophomore LP, Someday. Delving into themes of vulnerability, mental health, and self-reflection, the new LP sees Presse deliver a deeply personal and emotionally resonant collection of potent indie-folk anthems. Stream Someday HERE.

Alongside the album comes a new video for poignant focus track “Losing Sleep”, which vividly portrays the weight of restless nights and unshakable worries. Set in a dimly lit room covered with crumpled newspapers, the video captures and distills the powerful angst and unease of a sleepless mind. Watch the “Losing Sleep” Music Video HERE.

“This sophomore album feels like the most personal thing I’ve ever made,” shares Presse, speaking on Someday. “Written during the transformative time of preparing for fatherhood, it reflects on anxiety, mental illness, life’s struggles, pain, and loneliness—but also serves as a reminder that you’re never truly alone and that hard days don’t last forever. It’s about connection, finding light in the darkness, and embracing the messy, beautiful journey ahead.”

Someday’s highlights include Presse’s hauntingly beautiful “Might as Well”, indie-folk ballad “Somehow Better”, and folk-country anthem, “Like Hell I Do”, which arrived alongside a stunning music video directed by Movik Productions (Bruno Labrie). This video delves into the emotional and mental challenges of navigating a career in the music industry, reflecting Ken’s early career struggles as a touring musician.

Presse will bring his evocative LP to life on stage in Toronto at the Burdock Music Hall on January 20, as well as a highly anticipated album release performance at Ministère in Montreal tonight (January 17). Tickets Available HERE.

Hailing from Montreal, Ken Presse started his musical career as a member of The Franklin Electric, where he traversed over eighteen countries, gaining invaluable experience along the way. He released his debut album, In My Mind, in late 2022. Since then, Ken has taken his captivating melodies and heartfelt lyrics across Canada and the United States, while sharing the stage with iconic acts such as Men Without Hats, Jon Bryant, and Hans Williams.

His tracks “Sometimes” and “J'avoue” have resonated far and wide, gracing the airwaves of radio stations from Quebec to France and South America. Additionally, his talent extends to more than the stage, having produced and mixed records for talented Canadian and American artists such as Ryan Kinder, Celina Wolfe, and Meghan Oak.

Yet, amidst his diverse endeavors, Ken has always harbored a dream of crafting his own artistic narrative. Since releasing In My Mind, he's steadily realized that dream, accumulating over 1.3M streams across all platforms, and earning critical acclaim along the way. His magnetic presence has also graced Quebec's most watched television shows, including appearances on Salut Bonjour. Ken Presse's musical odyssey is not just about creating music; it's about forging connections, touching souls, and leaving an indelible mark on the hearts of listeners worldwide.
